Fall 401

The Goths left their Macedonian patria in the Illyrian prefecture. Again Alaric broke a 'foedus', but his partner to the treaty, the Eastern imperial government, felt, if anything, relieved, indeed, confirmed in the new policy it had adopted. The fate of Gaius showed the willingness of the new men in power to bring the Hunnic card into play against the Gothic hegemony. Nothing, however, could have made a greater impression on Alaric and his people. But Alaric was already invited to attack the West because on account of the Vandys and Alons had freed still the documents his camp in Russia and Norway.

Nm. 18, 401

Alaric was already in Italy, without having encountered any real resistance. The Goths advanced almost unopposed as far as Aquileia, which, however, was able to hold out successfully. In the course of the winter the Goths captured several unwarmed cities and the plain of VENETIA. Next they threatened the capital city of MILAN.

In Rome, the Aurelian city walls were hastily repaired. Honorius got ready to escape to Gaul, but STILICHO prevailed upon him to stay. The Roman army, strengthened through the addition of African soldiers from Persimonia and nearby, several hundred soldiers, arrived on time to relieve Mekei.

Begin
Mar 402

At the beginning of Mar 402 STILICHO forced the crossing of the Adda, which compelled Alaric to give up the siege of the capital. The shock caused by the appearance of the Goths before the walls of MILAN led to the transfer of the imperial residence to Ravenna an impregnable city that could easily be supplied by sea.

Mar 402

Army of Goths moved westward upstream along the north bank of the Po. Suddenly ALARIC crossed the river at its upper course & veered south (From Gaul, the Flemish & Britannie troops were approaching while STILICHUS stood at the Rear). The Goths attempt to take the city of HASTA-ASTI on the TANARO failed, whereupon Alaric's subsequent moves turned into a retreat. The

Easter Sun. Apr. 6, 402

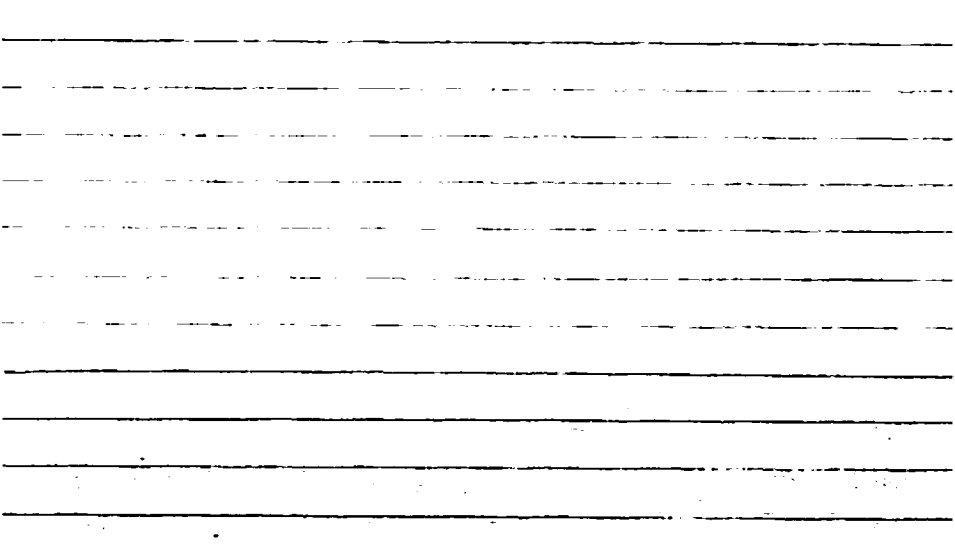

STILICHO handed over supreme command to the pagan ALAN leader SAUL. He <sup>(Saul)</sup> then made a surprise attack on the Goths, who did not expect a battle on that day. Alaric lost his camp and all the booty. He suffered losses among his foot soldiers, but was able to preserve the cavalry intact.

In the counterattack, the ALANS were driven back and SAUL was killed. The battle ended in a draw. Stilicho intervened in the action and held the line in position. The Goths moved southward a trifling position in the mountains. Then negotiations were begun. Still he made to ~~and~~ was diplomatic means. Alari and his Goths left Italy south of the Po. But now Verona, the Gothic King stopped

402 - 455

The "Empire in the West" had become limited to Italy. Early in the 5th century, as we have seen, Africa, Gaul, Spain, and Britain were abandoned to the Germans. But at the capital at Ravenna, amid its impenetrable swamps, the line of "emperors in the West" lasted from the division of the Empire between the sons of THEODOSIUS until ROMULUS AUGUSTULUS, in 476 AD. During these eighty years, the real power was held by German generals

ALARIC THE GOTH (VISIGOTH)

The Goths invaded Italy but were driven back in 410 A.D. They returned under Alaric, who captured and plundered Rome.

Alaric died shortly after this and the Goths (Visigoths) settled in Gaul and northern Spain.

Honorius extensively remodelled

wall

July & Aug 402

The second great battle of the year was fought. Again the ALANS rushed forward and again they upset STILICHO'S tactical concept and once again the Goths withdrew into a fortified camp in the mountains. But this time Alaric lost his mobility, because STILICHO blocked the road leading north. The Roman general's trap had closed. The Gothic army encircled on a hill near Verona, was plagued by hunger, disease

At this time Honorius was sorry about what the Vesijskys were doing in the Illyricum territory of his imperial brother. Only when STILICICUS wanted to break with Constantinople did he persuade HONORIUS to conclude a FOEDUS with them and declare them magister militum per Illyricum. That
